HOW A COMPANY OF TRAVELERS ENTERTAINED THEMSELVES.

Items of Interest and Prices.

Cost of Living in Boston.

Intrigues through the beautiful state of California, we stopped at the Palace Hotel of Los Angeles, and found among the guests several strangers who had been engaged in the same kind of intrigue, and with nothing but success. The result of our visit, and comparison of experience with the experts, was that we were compelled to leave the city. It was long before we reached home. One of the gentry whom we left behind, however, had come to Louisville, Ky., related an incident worthy of mention to us.

The man had been a sailor, and had been a great sufferer from rheumatism, but he had recovered many of the best physical and mental qualities which he had lost, and had become a valuable member of society.

At last he arrived at the hotel where he was first received. At last he arrived at the hotel where he was first received.

He was seated in a chair, and the waiter brought him a glass of beer, which he drank.

"What is this?" he said, "I have never had so much beer in my life."

"It is beer," said the waiter.
